MANABOUT TOWN (BY HARRY TUCKER)

When a fellow gets up in the merning and wants a drink of water quick, some attention should be given him.

He doesn't need a curtain lecture or a stony glare or a hearse laugh.

He needs the water; and it will de him good.

Give it to him, and jolly him along.

It may be that he's been up all night with a sick friend, or has suffered agony ith the grip Or it may have been something else. Frequently it is. But that's another we can, and then let him go back to we can, and sleep again,

They say that a woman's eyes are the electrical sparks that kindle love, and that the woman speaks volumes through them without uttering a word.

All the great men of ancient and modern geography and compound fractions and interest and literature have suffered wounds that have gone with them to early graves through woman's eyes, and plainer men are now doing the same thing.

thing.

There is a whole lot in an eye.

Sometimes there is a mote in an eye.

But what's that got to do with it, anyway? What we, started out to say was tiat a woman's eyes have a something about them that tells a fellow that he is under a spell, and he don't know what to do about it, but wander around with that psychological enigma that goes with an uncertainty and a delirious something or other.

Or words to that effect.

We ran up against Mr. Charles Aebil, a good fellow ahead of "A Friend of the Family" Company, at the Academy tonight.

He told us what a good show he had, and he told us some other things that were true, and we have to believe him when he says what he says.

But we don't have to believe what he says about the show, for we have seen it, and we pronounce it pretty good on the says account.

it, and we product own account.

He's one of the good fellows.

Mr. Frank Bixley is here.

He was up in Canada the other day on a train when the wind came along and blew the train off the track to another track forty yards away, and a train on the other track was blown over on his track.

And when he awoke he was back where he started from, and the train hadn't stopped running.

He said we could believe it if we cared to, and as he was bigger and fiereer looking than us, we took his word

After he goes out of town next week, we are going to tell what we really think of it.

Mr. Bixley is here with his charming wife. He is ahead of "His Last Dollar."

OF HUMAN INTEREST; STORIES OF TO-DAY

Needed a Gentleman.

A story is told about an experience of Mayor McClellan a few years ago at a socal aftair in Washington, says the New York Disses. Mr. McClellan was then congressman from the Twelfth New York Dissrict. He was introduced to a gushing young woman, daughter of a western Democratic politician. She was keenly interested in politics, but her knowledge was not proportioned to her zeal. She had a brother living in New York, who had ambitions for the career of a statesman, and she was bubbling over with the young man's plans. These were the chief topics of her conversation with the congressman from the Twelfth.

"My brother's going to run for Congress," she remarked, by way of introduction.

"Ah, sald Colonel McClellan.

"All, said Colonel McClellan.
"Yes," she continued, "he's going to run in the Twetth Discrict. He thinks there ought to be a gentleman in Congress from that district, and a horrid Tammany man has the place now."

Colonel McClellan did not disturb her joy by disclosing the identity of the "horrid Tammany man."

The Persistent Appendage.

Once upon a time there was a primordial cell of protoplasm that put out a silort, stender thread, which it wiggled, and then rejoiced in a tall, says the New York Herald. After that came a fish, and a saurian, and a bird, and the long list of mammals, to the monkey.

"Behold!" said the scientist among the monkeys, "all living creatures are troumonkeys, "all living creatures are trou-bled with tails, and the higher the civil-ization, the longer the tails."

Then one of his auditors insisted that they had cousins, called men, who had no tails.
